REPORT OF SCHOOL BOARD

For the Year Ending February 15, 1914.

We have maintained eleven schools during the year, each having an equal length of thirty weeks, with three weeks extra for No. 1 on account of the Philbrick fund.

The pupils from No. 12 have been transported to No. 7.

We have been fortunate in securing good teachers, who have been earnest and faithful in their labor, and in all of the schools good progress in all branches has been the result.

The district school is really the most important institution in the community, as the teacher is, or ought to be, among the most essential personages. To her (and I use the feminine because all our teachers are women) is committed the care of our children in the period when they are most easily molded and when her influence and precept are much more potent than those of the parents. To so guide the childish mind that it shall be bent in the direction of its greatest gift and strongest intuition is most important.

The teachers in the country schools all over the land are shaping the destiny of this great republic.

On the last day of the term at one of our district schools I attended the entertainment provided for the occasion, and after it was over I had a long conversation with the teacher, a woman who has had charge of that school for several years. I suggested that she was doubtless glad that the school year was at an end and that she could look forward with pleasure to a vacation of two months. To my surprise she replied that on the contrary she was sorry, "Because," she added, "I love the children and I shall greatly miss them, and the only thing that prevents me from being downright unhappy over the separation is the thought that I am going back to this school in the fall."

The usual conception of the public school teacher is that she is engaged in the work solely as a matter of business, and that she is not particularly happy in it. If this view be the correct one, which I doubt, here at least was a happy exception. I could not but remark that it was fortunate for the parents of those children that the woman who would have most to do with the formation of their characters in the most impressionable years of their life was so thoroughly in love with her work.

FRITZ E. KALLENBERG,
Member of School Board.
